

The National Foundation for Jewish Culture was established in 1960 in order to preserve Jewish history. Residing in the U.S, the NFJC realizes how important it is to leave as a legacy its rich and diverse culture to present and future generations of Jewish Americans.

This growing organization is presently in every region of the U.S.. Its membership is comprised of individuals in the fields of art, literature, dance, and movies, who generate programs that illustrate the importance of the arts and humanities to the continuity of Jewish life in America.

The NFJC works in three key areas to do the following:

1. Foster new creativity in the performing arts, visual arts, literary arts, media arts and all the disciplines of scholarship.
2. Preserve cultural heritage through the restoration and revival of classics in films and theater performance as well as through the research and conservation of Jewish museums, libraries and archives.
3. Enrich the Jewish Community through traveling exhibitions, Jewish publications, media presentations and educational lectures and conferences in the humanities.
